Dear Judge Kollar-Kotally,

I am writing to you regarding Microsoft's Proposed Final Judgment as a concerned citizen. I urge you to critically examine the politics involved in this proposal, which sounds suspiciously and alarmingly lenient for a company that has been proven to be in violation of Antitrust laws. On numerous occasions Microsoft has abused its position as an illegal monopoly, adversely affecting several growing companies and thousands of Americans working to find their place in a competitive free-market. Antitrust laws were put in place to foster an environment of healthy competitiveness which would in turn further technology and stimulate the economy. However, I do not believe that the PJF satisfactorily addresses Microsoft's violations in a way that this antitrust activity will be punished or come to an end. In fact, the PJF seems to be doing just the contrary, by conveying the message that their illegal activities are condoned, perhaps even encouraged. I am afraid of what might happen next to this freedom we have tried so hard to preserve if such an injustice is carried out and such a precedent set.

I trust that you will deal with this issue with wisdom and integrity so that justice will be served.

Respectfully,
Charlene Chen McGrew
